It focused on 'How to Scale-up Green MSMEs?' and exploring financial, institutional, market and policy means to achieve the same.

During the discussion, Dr Pawan stressed on the need to address the inherent risks in each sector individually instead of identifying them under one umbrella and then frequently changing government policies in those sectors. While sharing her ground experience, Dr Nandini emphasized on how women running micro enterprises in agriculture do not differentiate between ecology and livelihood. Avinash Pareek expressed that though government regulations are crucial in making the shift to green economy, but they are not translated into proper actions. He also mentioned that greening all sectors needs policy and fiscal interventions. The audience highlighted the lack of technology and finance as the biggest hindrance to growth of MSMEs. The triologue2047 became platform for interactive discussions and exchange of knowledge among the audience.
